American civilian contractor killed (Iraq)

Tikrit (Iraq) - An American civilian contractor was killed Tuesday when a remote-control bomb exploded under the truck he was driving north of Tikrit, the U.S. military said.

(05.08.2003)

The contractor was employed by Kellogg Brown & Root, a subsidiary of Halliburton, a Houston-based oilfield-services and construction company. Halliburton, the former company of Vice President Dick Cheney has major contracts for reconstruction in both Iraq and Afghanistan.

Maj. Brian Luke, of the 4th Infantry Division, said the five-vehicle convoy was traveling from Baghdad when it was attacked. Insurgents have increasingly been using roadside bombs detonated by remote control to attack American forces. Kellogg Brown & Root has been doing work at the Baiji refinery and pipeline terminus about 30 miles north of Tikrit, the hometown of deposed dictator Saddam Hussein about 125 miles north of Baghdad.

The military said the destination of the convoy was not immediately known, and that the name of the civilian was being withheld until relatives were notified.

Von: 05 August 2003, De Oppresso Liber. All rights reserved.

<<< zurück zu: News

© 2016 Landmine.de