The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) made available for this year a global amount of 20 million US dollars for the implementation of projects to help Angolan needy children, an official source has announced. Landmines are part of the programmes.

UNICEF representative to Angola, Marco Ferrari, said that this amount is being used in programmes for health and education sectors, through rehabilitation of schools and health centres.

Awareness campaigns against HIV/AIDS and landmines are part of the UN children agency's programmes for this year, said Marco Ferrari, who acknowledged that the amount for this year is not enough.
